GENEALOGY OF THEODORE H. MACK.

PATERNAL ANCESTRY OF THE FAMILY.

Of the paternal ancestors of this family, little is known to the writer, as to names, dates, etc., beyond his Great Grandfather. The graves of other ancestors are found at Lyme, Connecticut, dating back about 150 years. They originally came—tradition says two brothers—from the Highlands of Scotland, about the year 1700. The motto on the Coat of Arms of the Macks of Scotland, was; “In spe et Labore intransigo vitam.” (In hope and labor I pass my life.) A noble motto, truly. The following we suppose to be line of descent as far as traceable, the direct line of descent being designated by a *

Of her maternal ancestors we learn that her mother's grandfather, ——— Bartlett, was from France, went to England and married, thence to America. Her father Richard M. Bartlett, married a daughter of Capt. Joseph Lowell of Newburyport, Mass , and resided in New York City, where he raised something of a family, among which were Rev. Richard Bartlett, and Hannah, who married Joseph Rundlett, and where A. F. R. Emmons married his daughter Elizabeth, soon afterwards removing to the west, and becoming one of the earliest residents of Sterling, Ill.

Of the Lowels much might be written. They descended from Percival Lowell, a merchant of Bristol, England, who came to America and settled at Newbury, in 1639. Abner Lowell was the first lighthouse keeper at Newburyport, Mass. His son Lewis succeeded him, and was suffocated in the lantern, by gas from charcoal used to warm the oil. His son Joseph, above named, succeeded him. He married Eunice Tappan daughter of John S. Tappan, Feb. 24, 1824. Capt. Lowell was of one of the first families of the continent. He was born in Salisbury, where at that time the Lowells were very numerous; and they were the same family as the Newbury Lowell's, all having sprung from Percival Lowell. From him was Rev. John Lowell, first minister of Newburyport, whose son John, the great American statesman and jurist, in the convention 1780, was the author of the declaration in the bill of rights:—"All men are born free and equal." Under that declaration slavery was abolished in the State ; so that before Garrison was, Lowell had been; the two great leaders for emancipation—the former in the nation and the latter in the state. His son John Lowell, LL. D. not only held the highest rank in his profession, but in the early part of the century exercised more influence over the New England mind than any other living name. His brother was the leader in American manufactures, for whom Lowell city was named; and he had a son, who amid the ruins of Thebes, in Egypt, made a will bequeathing a quarter of a million of dollars to found the Lowell Institute, of whom Everett wrote —“The few sentences penned with a tired hand on the top of a palace of the Pharaohs, will do more for human improvement than was done by all that gloomy dynasty.” Of the same family and nearly allied were Rev. Dr. Lowell of Boston; his sister, Mrs. Putnam, who could read twenty languages, and who wrote so eloquently for Kossuth and the Hungarians of 1849; and the Poet

James Russell Lowell; and a host of others who are the pride and glory of American liberty and literature.
